Mental Health Issues – Where To Go For Help And Support At Work

An Advice Guide
for Usdaw Members

There Are Times When We All Feel We Have Too Much On Our Plate...

When this happens, being an Usdaw member can really help.

Mental health problems are very common. Estimates show one in four people will experience a mental health problem in any year.

Udaw has thousands of trained reps who can advise and support members who are having problems at work or are not sure what their rights are.

But we are not just here for when things go wrong at work; we can help with a whole range of issues such as:

- Needing time off work for family reasons.
- Changes to your hours of work.
- Concerns about your health or the health of a family member.
- Money worries.
- Where to go for help with benefits, debt and housing problems.

If You Need Help at Work, You Can Talk to Your Rep in Confidence

The sooner you do this, the quicker you can get the help you need.

If you need help with a situation outside of work, Usdaw can help you find the right place to go for support and advice.

The list of support organisations on the following pages might be of help if you or someone you know are feeling under pressure.

Udaw has thousands of reps who can advise and support members at work.

The Social vs the Medical Model of Disability

For some time now, disabled people have emphasised that it is not so much their disability that prevents them from fully participating in society, but instead it is the way in which society fails to make adjustments for their disability that excludes them.

This emphasis on changing the barriers put up by society, rather than seeing the disabled person as the 'problem', is known as the 'social model of disability'. In other words, disabled people are people with impairments/ health conditions who are disabled by discrimination, exclusion, prejudice and negative attitudes towards disability. Their impairment is not the problem.

The 'medical model' attributes the problems resulting from a disability to medical conditions alone. It concentrates on a person's impairment. Rather than focusing on the barriers society throws up that prevent disabled people from participating equally, the 'medical model' focuses on what disabled people should do to adapt to fit into the world as it is. If they are unable to adapt, the medical model accepts their exclusion.

For example, while a mobility difficulty can have an adverse effect on a person's ability to walk, the fact that the transport system is inaccessible to them has a far greater effect on their ability to get around.

Unfortunately, the law is rooted in the medical model. It has been rightly criticised for focusing on an individual's impairments and their ability to carry out normal day-to-day activities, rather than on getting rid of the barriers society puts in the way of disabled people.

This booklet is designed to help understand how the law can support disabled members in the workplace, and therefore tends to focus on the medical model.
